VETOES ANTI-TRUST BILL

CHIEF EXECUTIVE REFUSES TO APPROVE MEASURE AS PASSED.

MESSAGE GIVES REASONS

Outlines Policy of New State as to Capital and Declares Commonwealth Needs More Business.

Guthrie, Okla., May 16.—Gov. Haskell today returned the anti-trust bill to the Senate without his approval. The plan of passing a supplementary bill correcting objections to the original measure was found to be impracticable, owing to the short time remaining of this session. As soon as the vote had been sustained, a new bill covering the objection was introduced. The bill bears the names of Senators Eggerman, Redwine and Davis and Representatives Ellis and Lindsay.

Policy Outlined.

The measure of transmission is somewhat of importance, as it outlines what may be accepted as the State's policy toward the commercial interests, and at the same stroke, the Governor informs the public that Oklahoma wants more business of the proper kind.

In an original proposition, the Governor contends that Oklahoma needs to guard its varied industries as well as all classes of people, and must not permit one class to impose upon or rob the other. He suggests that the definition of monopolies in restraint of trade, being a copy of the Sherman anti-trust act, as carried in the original bill, be enlarged so as to include any concern which is an aid to commerce.

To Stop Rate Pooling.

"Because I believe," the message recites, "that it is as essential to stop fire insurance companies from pooling their rates as it is to stop coal companies from pooling their products and robbing the consumer."

An objection is registered against the receivership section, wherein the Attorney General may appear before one of the Supreme Judges and file a petition for the appointment of a receiver in alleged violation of the anti-monopolistic provisions, and the receiver is empowered to immediately take charge of the defendant's property, by terms of the bill, without any notice to the defendant to put his objections to the court. The message carries the suppositional case of an interior wholesale grocery concern to show how the law might be applied, with which illustration it is established how credit would be destroyed and the effects of which must extend through the entire commercial chain from producer to consumer.

Must Provide Legally.

"It is a serious proposition," continues the Governor, "that simply because the defendant is thought to be guilty of unlawful conspiracy, his property should be taken away from him and his credit destroyed without even a day's notice in which to appear in court. But on the other hand, we do not want to weaken the powers of the State to destroy trusts so that the efforts of the officers will be weakened."

Needs of the State.

In conclusion the message calls attention to the hundreds of towns in Oklahoma which want street cars, electric lights, power plants and municipal conveniences, waterworks, of business enterprise. It states that the people desire their raw products and material manufactured in the State into salable articles, and to accomplish this the State must as vigorously protect the honest industry as it would vigorously prosecute the dishonest monopolies.

The section imposing a jail sentence for violations is complimented, for, the Governor says, when a managing officer of a corporation knows he will be personally punished for violating the law he will be more careful than where only a fine against the property is imposed.

Governor Talks.

Regarding the veto, the Governor tonight said:

"I vetoed the anti-trust bill because in my judgement, its operation, if allowed to become a law, would work a serious damage to our most numerous and deserving classes of citizens. Under the proposed law the credit of every wholesale house in the State would be absolutely swept and the farmers would be materially interfered with by being prevented from organizing to hold their cotton, corn, wheat or other products to prevent a glutting of the market and a consequent lowering of the price immediately following the harvesting of the crop."

About the Printing Contest.

Guthrie, Okla., May 12.—The State Printing Board has made up prices on schedules one and two of the printing work for this year and finds that out of the twenty-nine items in schedule one, and twenty-seven items in schedule two that eight different bidders, Ada News, Ada Ardmore Democrat, Ardmore, McAlester Capital, McAlester Times-Democrat, Muskogee, Shawnee Herald, Shawnee, Leader Printing Company, Guthrie; Constitution, Lawton; Oklahoma Printing Company, Guthrie, were represented in the low figures on different ones of these items, but that no bidder was low on all of the items, therefore the State Printing Board made up the prices the State is willing to pay for low bids and tender each one of the eight lowest bidders the right to do their proportion of the work during the year.

Schedule number three. There were nine bidders on this schedule. The schedule contains sixteen different items. No bidder was low on all items. Among the low figures three bidders are represented, The Leader Printing Company, Guthrie; State Capital, Guthrie, and Warden Edright Printing Company, Oklahoma City.

The State Printing Board makes up the prices from the low bids that the State is willing to pay this year for the class of work embraced in schedule three and gives these three bidders the opportunity to take portions of the work at the low bid schedule made by the State Board.

Schedule four embraces a class of work that cannot well be divided to different shops, hence it is awarded J. A. Armstrong of Ardmore, whose bids aggregated are found to be lowest.

Schedule number five is awarded to the Oklahoma Printing Company of Oklahoma City, which was the lowest on every one of the eleven items included in the schedule.

Schedule of prices in every case will be sent to each bidder representing the schedule in which he is awarded any work.

Stops Shipment of Lumber.

McCurain, Okla., May 16.—County Judge Barnes has granted an injunction against the Southern Trust company of Denison, Tex., preventing it from cutting and shipping pine lumber from lands of Indian citizens of this county. The company claims to have a contract for the timber, but some of those from whom the timber has been taken made a complaint. The court order is based upon the fact that an order of sale of the timber was not procured in this county. Millions of feet of pine timber have been shipped out of the county during the last few months.

District Court.

District Court adjourned its special session Saturday. Three murder cases were tried during the term, resulting in two convictions and one acquittal.

PORTUGUESE MOURARCH AS-TOUND HOUSEHOLD BY OPIN-ION ON MARRIGE.

Daughter of One of Queen Amelia's
Ladies in Waiting Said to Be Object of Youthful Ruler.
Lisbon, May 17.—The Mundo prints
a romantic story about King Manuel's attachment for the young daughter of a lady in waiting to Queen Amelia, which threatens to disrupt the matrimonial plans which are being laid for him. King Carlos and Queen Amelia were fully aware of the fondness of Manuel when a Prince for the girl, who is connected with the highest Portuguese nobility, but they considered it simply a childish fancy.

Manuel Surprises Them All.
Since Prince Manuel's unexpected accession to the throne, a suitable alliance with an European royal house is regarded as a necessity of state. Queen Amelia and the Duke of the Oporto have been casting about to find an available Princess, each favoring one of British extraction because of the close relations between the two countries. A few days ago they were openly canvassing the matter in the King's presence, when to their great surprise, he suddenly announced as his understandable choice his early love, and proclaimed his determination either to marry her or nobody.

To Try Separation Cure.
Remonstrances on the ground of reasons of state were without effect, and as a consequence the lady in waiting and her daughter will be asked to go abroad in the hope that a long separation will cure the King of his boyhood love.

Pay Homage to Manuel.
Lisbon, May 17.—Nearly 17,000 residents of Oporto, representing all grades of monarchists, arrived here today by a special train. They marched in procession to the palace and presented homage to King Emmanuel.

DEATH ON GALLOWES.

John Hopkins to Hang June 26 for Murder of Lena Gray on January 5.

Miami, Okla., May 16.—By death on the gallows John Hopkins, the confessed slayer of Lena Gray, a pretty young school teacher, near here, on the evening on Jan. 5, must pay the penalty for one of the most cold-blooded crimes ever committed in this part of the State. The date of execution has been fixed by District Judge Brown for June 26.
"I shall propose to her once more and if she does not accept, no other man shall have a chance to win her," Hopkins had said to a party of friends one week before. Her persistent objection of his offers of marriage had led him, with his mind given to the weakness of drink, to linger much at the bowl. He went to Joplin and with liquor prepared himself for the desperate deed.

Meeting at 25000 Club Rooms Sunday night and $4,500 Subscribed.

A large number of representative citizens of Ada met in the parlors of the 25000 Club Saturday night, for the purpose of organizing a company composed of citizens of Ada to dig a well either for gas or oil. About $4,500 of stock was subscribed. It will be necessary to raise about $10,000 before the work will begin. This is an Ada enterprise and composed of every citizen of Ada who desires to become a stockholder. Nobody will be barred. The stock is placed at $10 per share with 20 per cent down and 20 per cent payable monthly. If gas or oil should be struck in paying quantities your stock would be advanced 100 per cent. C. H. Rines and A. K. Thornton were appointed a committee to solicit stock subscription. Of course the company will ask the city for a franchise to protect them against outside capital if they should make a strike, and it will no doubt be granted. Mr. H. M. Saunders, who bored the well near Ada last summer is on the ground and is interesting the citizens in the project. Did he not believe that it would certainly be a success he certainly would not be spending his time and money here. Every citizen who can should take some stock, if only one share, and become interested in the development of these undoubted oil fields.

Ordinance to be Submitted to Council Establishing Same.

City Attorney Holt is preparing an ordinance for the approval of the council to establish a grade on the streets and sidewalks and making it compulsory on the property owners to build sidewalks in compliance with the same. It will include brick or cement, or either. Quite a number of our citizens are ready now to build the sidewalks but in the absence of a grade do not like to build and then be compelled to tear it up to conform to the grade. The ordinance will probably be taken from some of the modern cities who have up-to-date streets and sidewalks. It will be necessary to have a city engineer, who will superintend the putting down of all sidewalks and attend to the proper grading of the streets. This will make the city more beautiful and will enhance the value of your property.

The Vanishing Feet

BY ROY NORTON.

the surgeons declared he was coming down with brain fever and that his very life depended on his taking absolute rest.

To hazard another trip of a radio-plane was out of the question, because the administration was aware that spies were still in the capital. The president himself sent messengers to find the girl on whom so much depended, only to learn at a late hour that she had not yet reached Washington, but was expected to arrive that night. He preferred to communicate his tidings to her in person, and therefore left word that she should call at the White House the following morning. In the meantime advance preparations were made for her conveyance to the island, together with the grim old fighting admiral, Bevins, who was now to assume command of the aerial forces of America, and those officers who from time to time had been called home from various ships.

And then, when night fell and the president's cup seemed full, came the swift and unexpected announcement that the Japanese had fallen upon the Philippines. War was on, and the long expected gauntlet lay in the lists, while the nation heaved and rocked in turmoil, quivered with insult, and cried aloud for vengeance.

When Norma appeared at the White House she was told of her father's condition by the president himself, who was plainly harassed to the limit by anxiety.

"You can go at once," he said, "but what then? Are there any who can work the radioplanes?"

"Yes, by nightly flights we have trained crews for all and more than we have built."

"But there should be some expert guiding mind who knows the secret of the craft."

"Father had intended to accompany them and himself direct the leading radioplane in case of attack."

The president threw up his hand in a gesture of hopelessness. The time for attack was fast approaching, and could not be postponed on account of the inventor's illness. Norma, who had been standing beside a window, confronted the worried head of the nation.

"You forget," she said, "that I have youth, strength, will and knowledge. Neither my father's nor my country's cause shall suffer."

He walked across the room, towering above her in ungainly strength, took both her hands in his and looked deeply into her eyes. "You mean—"

"That if my father is too ill to go, I myself will fight the Japanese. I myself will give what expert advice is needed, and will demonstrate to the others what must be done in battle." Inflamed by the thought of what was dependent upon her, pride in her father, and Americanism, she was ready to accept the responsibility, even though it might cost her life.

They stood in silence, holding each other's hands. He stooped over her, his sad eyes filled with an admiration which was akin to veneration, and kissed her.

"Joan of Arc! Joan of Arc!" he whispered, and said no more.

She had been told that a train awaited. Together they walked to the door of the president's study through the halls, and to the outer portal. Unheeding those who were near, he caught her hand and held it to his breast, looking once more into her eyes.

"God bless and keep you, my child!" he said, and abruptly turned back to his seclusion, his head dropped forward between his massive shoulders and his arms swinging loosely at his sides.

The day was not yet done, and before the next had dawned came the announcement that the Hawaiian islands had also been surrendered to the foe. The coterie of men within the secret held their meeting and congratulated each other that orders had been obeyed, no defense made, and loss of life obviated. But the public must be pacified. The swift convening of congress, its authorization of the administration to act, and the appealing notice to the public that a well-defined policy was being pursued, followed one after the other, but still were not understood.

Night and day now the president and his associates toiled and planned. Report after report came to them, until they knew that the hour to act had come. The spell of seeming lethargy was at an end, and with unprecedented swiftness the cordon was thrown round the nation, its ports closed, and its communication shut off save through channels of the secret service, which was intensely active.

Time was computed to the minute, and when the fleet of conquest sailed from Japan the very latitude and longitude of the point where it was to be met were communicated to the headquarters in Florida, where had been renewed energy.

Hence it was that, as darkness once more mantled that isolated spot, a strange scene was witnessed. It was the departure of that invincible squadron of the air for the scene of battle. Night after night they had maneuvered, till those who manned them were masters of their craft and of the new form of signals which were to be used in case of emergency. Every detail was complete, every possible precaution was taken to avert accident.

And what a difference there was between this fleet and those to which the men aboard were accustomed! On those battlefleets of the seas were magnificent forces of men trained to fight, which were numbered by thousands; but here each crew consisted of a bare half-dozen. In the hulls of those vessels of the sea strove a small army, watching over and driving huge engines, and supplying them with steam; here were only one man and an assistant standing before levers, switches and buttons, which did their work instantaneously and with no noise. In those destroyers of the waters throbbed mighty engines considered the modern triumph of speed; here was a craft that by a finger's pressure could almost run abreast the sun. Those ships bristled with mighty guns; here were no frowning muzzles or unwieldy turrets. Science was bringing an end to brute force, and the last battle against barbarism was at hand.

For the first time since its birth the great plant was silent and idle and the men who had created it and by its means built this new fleet of the air were at rest. They had done all they could, and now gathered silently round the radioplanes, which stood in orderly array with portlike doors yawning wide to receive their crews. "Fighting" Bevins stood by his flag-craft, the Norma, and looked at the force under his command. Captains who had handled hundreds of men and driven their great floating crafts of steel, and engineers who had learned new callings waited attentively for his last instructions.

The battle-scarred veteran addressed them in a voice that needed no high pitch to be audible to all his hearers. "Gentlemen," he said, "I have nothing more to say to you. You are going out to fight what will probably be the last great battle in history. You are active participants in the final chapter of international war. The time is approaching when our profession will be useless, and I for one shall gladly turn to ways of peace."

Norma, who had left the bedside of the sleeping inventor, joined the officers, and Bevins stopped and saluted her.

"With us," he continued, "is a girl who has laid all her talents on the altar of country, and is now prepared to jeopardize her life for victory. We can do no less. It may be that some of us will not return—the hazards of war can never be foreseen. You have been put in a strange position, and are even robbed of the sailor's right to send a last message to your homes; but that, too, has been for the country's good. To my personal knowledge you have all passed your lives in trying to do what was right, and have given the best that was in you to the flag. You will do no less now."

In the glare of the arc lights he took one last look at his comrades in arms, and then, as if once more at sea, loudly ordered: "Board ship, all!"

He uncovered and stood aside in an attitude of the greatest respect while Norma passed and entered the flag-ship bearing her name. With steady precision the other officers saluted, took possession of their radioplanes, and as the doors clanged shut behind them a mighty cheer burst from those outside. Before it had subsided the dynamos in the strange collection were humming and droning with unleashed energy, and the unshuttered ports stared out into the gloom like eyes of fire suddenly opened from sleep.

From the Norma there shot up into the sky swiftly alternating streaks of red, white and blue, the night signal asking if all was ready. From the other monsters came flashing answers of acquiescence. There was an instant's pause. The flagship gave a slight upward shock and lifted slowly into the air. Immediately behind in stately upward sweep followed another radioplane, and in quick succession, like gigantic birds of the night, they took flight in a great swinging circle until they reached a common altitude. The cheer below had died away, and all was still.

Then, as if answering the call of a baton swung by a god, the palpitant air was riven by a mighty chorus from beneath. Mounting upward there penetrated to them, quivering with terrific fervor, the cry of invincibility voiced in the majestic words of that deathless song of battle:

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage where his grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

Out to the west, over sleeping cities and homes, across mountain and plain, chasing the long set sun, they went to meet the fleet of an enemy which was steadily sailing to its doom. The sword of a nation's vengeance was cleaving the night skies in its deliverance of an overwhelming blow.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Battle.

It was in the long gray dawn of the summer morning, and the wide reach of ocean, slate colored in the early light, seemed asleep in its quietude, a scene where it was disturbed by moving prows. Steaming across its bosom a Pacific waters were there enemies capable of staying its progress, and insouciantly careless in superb strength, went the Japanese fleet. The huge flagship, the Ito, forced her way in advance, the apex of a great and formidable triangle, whose sides were formed by other battle ships of scarcely less tonnage, graceful cruisers, and swift-moving destroyers, while bringing up the far rear were the colliers in whose hulls were carried fuel for the great armada.

Here was the Kashima, which could drive her 17,000 tons of steel through the water at 15 knots speed; the Katori, but little smaller and almost as fast; the Asahi, the Mikasa, the Asama, the Tokiwa, and others which were dear to the heart and pride of Nippon—a gallant navy, carefully planned, well constructed, and of invincible size and strength. No squadron that breasted the waves might cause it to hesitate.

In the stillness of the morning there came a sudden, sharp exclamation from the man on the lookout, an excited call to the bridge, and the quick step of an officer in answer to the summons. Almost instantly he was followed by another, who brought with him a pair of powerful binoculars, through which he gazed in the direction indicated by the sailor. There in the immeasurable void of the upper air, so high above that it floated in the broader light, soared a covey of gigantic objects unpictured in the lore of flight. Onward it came until almost above, when it stopped and majestically hovered over them, and seemed to be watching and waiting for some ray of broader light. The pallid blue of those far-floating bodies rendered them almost indistinguishable, save when now and then they swung broadside to in deploying, resumed their speed, and swept round in circles.

Puzzled and amazed, the officer handed the glasses to his companion and watched his face attentively, as if hoping to read from its expression some solution of this mysterious visitation from the immense unclouded space above. The glasses were lowered, and the two men with the superstition of ages behind them turned to each other with pallid faces, fearing the supernatural or the unknown. Again they looked, and saw that the flying specks traveled with incredible rapidity, and were apparently observing them, after which, as they watched, they saw them come to an abrupt stop. It was enough. Whatever they were, their presence would be made known.

The officers sprang to the alarms, and in an instant thunderous volleys belled out across the waters, awakening the other vessels. Shrieking, the staccato blare of bugles, and the sound of running feet told the story of excitement and that well-drilled crews were answering the call. The hour was early for the perfect use of flag signals; so from one warship to another flashed the searchlight warnings, and wireless operators in their cabins ticked frantic messages to outlying members of the fleet to close in for action. Admirals and captains, who had fought successfully in other wars and counted their service as valuable adjuncts in any engagement, stood upon the bridges or the flanks of the great turrets and stared spellbound at this apparition which had come upon them in the night. There it was, a silent fleet of the air, sinister and menacing, lowering over them as if waiting opportunity or bidding its time to strike.

A sudden evolution brought one of those terrible adversaries to the outer edge of the aerial formation, and through their glasses they saw thrown out to the winds of the morning, whipping and writhing, the flag of the nation they had come to conquer; the oldest banner in the world, and the one they had been taught through months of consideration to despise. Stars on a field of blue, fit emblem for warriors of the clouds! And then ere the first flag had straightened out its heavy folds, the colors fluttered from each birdlike craft, a challenge to battle in which the odds were against them.

Aloft in that fleet of the air, where all was quiet, there was no sudden call of excitement. For hours they had watched and waited for the appearance of the enemy, and when he was sighted far below in the murk of the dawn each man took his post without words; but the martial spirit which sends men to battle burned clear and high. The supreme test was at hand, and the wait and preparation were at an end. The issue was in the lap of the gods.

The Norma had been the first to decry the oncoming fleet, and Fighting Bevins with his own hand had signaled his followers to reduce speed. Now he stood at the transparent ports, heard the sudden booming alarm, witnessed the excitement on the decks, and smiled with grim joy. By his side stood Norma, and not even he, trained to strife and accustomed from early manhood to scenes of carnage, was more cool or determined. He looked at her questioning, wondering whether or no he should read in her
